Graduate Study in the Laboratory of Comparative Primate Cognition

We seek highly motivated students with strong interests in nonhuman cognition to join the Laboratory of Comparative Primate Cognition <https://hamptonlab.wordpress.com/> at the Yerkes National Primate Research Center and to participate in graduate training in the Department of Psychology at Emory <http://psychology.emory.edu/home/index.html>.

Our department has recently upgraded our graduate training. Students are admitted to the department generally, and then focus their coursework and research in one of four concentrations: Behavioral and Systems Neuroscience, Clinical Science, Cognitive and Computational Science, or Developmental Science. Visit our website for more information <http://psychology.emory.edu/home/graduate/index.html>.

We recently hired three excellent new faculty members conducting research at the leading edges of their fields: Drs. Kragel, Tasimi, and Wilson. We anticipate making several additional hires this year. This is an exciting time to work in our department.

Successful students join our lab with solid experience and interest in animal behavior, neuroscience, comparative cognition, or related fields. Experience working with nonhuman animals in an experimental setting is a big plus, but not a requirement. Almost all the work in our lab involves computerized cognitive testing. Willingness to become a proficient programmer is therefore an absolute requirement.

We are looking for students interested in either primate or avian cognition, including students interested in great ape cognition <https://hamptonlab.wordpress.com/research-site-2/>.

Applications to our psychology graduate program are made through Emory's Laney Graduate School admissions portal <https://www.gs.emory.edu/admissions/index.html>. The deadline is December 1.
